Turrumurra to Sheldon Forest

Sheldon Forest is one of Sydney's rarest urban forests. Uniquely it is in walking distance not only from one railway station - Turrumurra – but also Pymble. The railway line forms an environmental corridor from Sheldon Forest to other reserves and forest remnants in garden settings.

The walk from Turrumurra Railway Station to Sheldon Forest showcases the unique relationship between the natural & built heritage of Ku-ring-gai. It also reveals layers of history—Indigenous, Colonial, Federation, Interwar, as well as revealing Australia's rich natural history.

Turrumurra is well known for its magnificent views. The Aboriginal word 'Turrumurra' means 'big hill' because of its location on one of the highest points on the North shore ridgeline. Turrumurra's most significant building— 'Hillview' is named because of its views towards Sydney's Botany Bay. The 'Turrumurra Lookout Park' is similarly named because of its views. Even pocket parks such as 'Turrumurra Village Park' provide important 'green viewline' from the 1890 Turrumurra railway station to 'Hillview'.

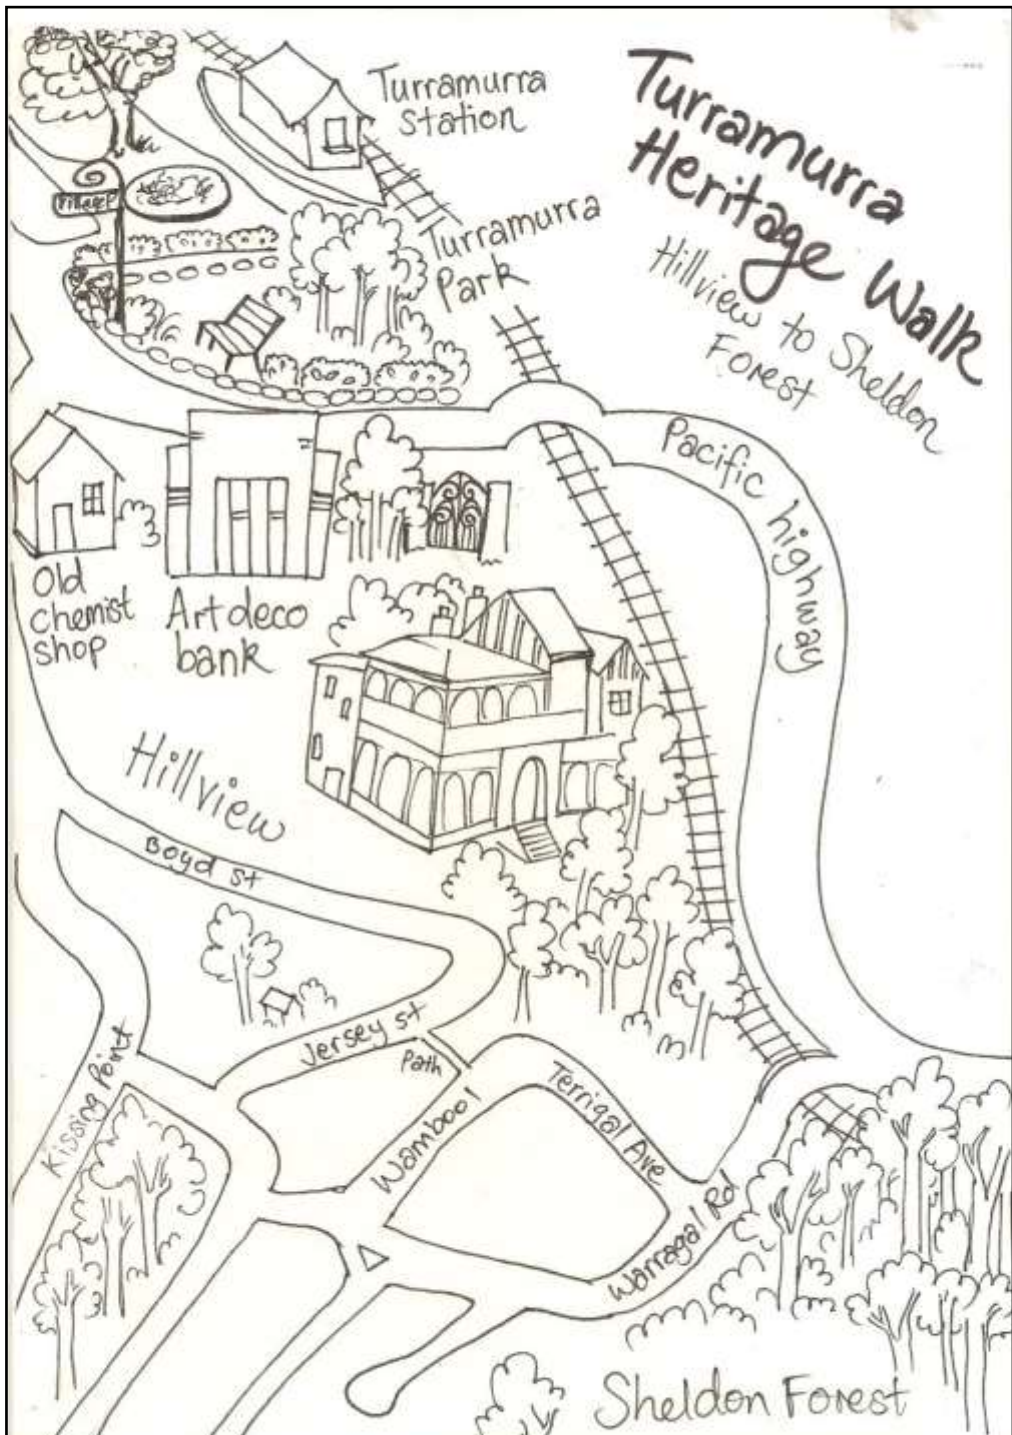

Recently the heritage of 'Hillview' has been extended to include the 1930s Commonwealth Bank, 1900s shop, the original chemist shop, and an early duplex in Boyd Street. This Hillview Heritage Conservation Area provides a rare opportunity to physically experience Turrumurra's many layers of history that includes the timbergetters that built early Sydney, the first land grants, the orchards, the health movement of the late Victorian period that established health retreats, guest and boarding houses. Today the site continues to be used for the community's health.

The FOKE walk proceeds into a valley of interwar bungalows and gardens, set in a landscape of remnant forest until it reaches the magnificent Sheldon Forest that contains the original soils to support this extremely rare Blue Gum High Forest (BGHF) and Sydney Turpentine Ironbark Forest (STIFF).

Medium density rezoning adjoining Sheldon Forest, and even recreational zoning within Sheldon Forest threatens the integrity of one of Sydney's rarest urban forests at its most valuable and vulnerable point – the narrow section—that is the last piece of Blue Gum High Forest to stretch to the Pacific Highway. FOKE is concerned that a recreational zoning within Sheldon Forest will fail to protect the forest for "perpetuity" as the recent BioBanking Agreement promises.

Instead of zoning for environmental protection, this unique landscape is still treated as 'grey field'. This attitude fails to acknowledge the contemporary crises of extinction, biodiversity loss and climate change. The walk will explain the threatening processes of fragmentation, canopy loss and habitat loss.

If we lose this heritage we will progressively lose our national identity.
